Honesty

Over and over we must ask ourselves. "Is it true or is it false?" For honesty is the eternal search for truth. It is by far the most difficult of the four Absolutes, for anyone... The problem drinker develops genuine artistry in deceit. Too many simply turn over a new leaf and relax. That is wrong. The real virtue in honesty lies in the persistent dedicated striving for it. There is no relaxed twilight zone, it's either full speed ahead constantly or it's not honesty we seek. And the unrelenting pursuit of truth will set you free, even if you don't quite catch up to it. We need not choose or pursue falsity. All we need is to relax our pursuit of truth, and falsity will of the soul. Let a human throw the engines of his soul into the doing or making of something good, and the instinct of workmanship alone will take care of his honesty. The noblest pleasure we can have is to find a great new truth and discard old prejudice. When not actively sought, truth seldom comes to light, but falsehood does. Truth is life and falsity is spiritual death. It's an everlasting, unrelenting instinct for truth that counts. Honesty is not a policy. It has to be a constant conscious state of mind.

Accuracy is close to being the twin brother of honesty, but inaccuracy and exaggeration are at least "kissing cousins" of dishonesty. We may bring ourselves to believe almost anything by rationalization, and so it's well to begin and end our inquiry with the question, "Is it true?" Any man who loves to search for truth is precious to any fellowship or society.

Any intended violation of honesty stabs the health of not only the doer, but the whole fellowship. On the other hand, if we are honest to the limit of our ability, the basic appetite for truth in others, which may be dormant but not dead, will rise majestically to join us.

It is much simpler to appear honest, than to be honest. We must strive to be in reality what we appear to be. It is easier to be honest with others than with ourselves. Our searching self-inventories help because the man who knows himself is at least on the doorstep of honesty. When we try to enhance our stature in the eyes of others, dishonesty is there in the shadows. When falsehood even creeps in, we are getting back on the merry-goround because falsehoods not only disagree with truth, they quarrel with each other. Remember?

It is one thing to devoutly wish the truth may be on your side, and it is quite another to wish sincerely to be on the side of truth. Honesty would seem to be the toughest of our four absolutes and at the same time, the most exciting challenge. Our sobriety is a gift, but honesty is a grace that we must earn and constantly fight to protect and enlarge. "Is it true or false?" Let us make that a ceaseless question that we try to answer with all the sober strength and intelligence we have.

General Service Article

GSR Preamble

We are the General Service Representatives. We are the link in the chain of communication for our groups with the General Service Conference and the world of AA. We realize the ultimate authority in AA is a loving God as he may express himself in our group conscience. As trusted servants, our job is to bring information to our groups in order that they can reach an informed group conscience. In passing along the group conscience, we are helping to maintain the unity and strength so vital to our fellowship. Let us, therefore, have the patience and tolerance to listen while others share, the courage to speak up when we have something to share, and the wisdom to do what is right for our groups as a whole.

(Reprinted, with permission, from Box 459, vol 35, No. 4 – August/September 1989)

If you are considering GSR service for your group for 09-10, attend the North County or South County meeting (locations and times in the Meeting Directory). Being an active part of AA as a whole is an exciting and rewarding adventure. Learn more about PRAASA (praasa09.org) where GSRs and other members from our 7 western states will gather in early March to discuss in depth some of the Conference's 2009 agenda topic items. Plan to spend a whole day, either Friday or Saturday, at the Marriott in Oakland.

Honesty

Rarely have we seen a person fail who has thoroughly followed our path.

Those who do not recover are people who cannot or will not completely give themselves to this simple program, usually men and women who are constitutionally incapable of being honest with themselves.

There are such unfortunates. They are not at fault; they seem to have been born that way.

They are naturally incapable of grasping and developing a manner of living which demands rigorous honesty. Their chances are less than average.

There are those, too, who suffer from grave emotional and mental disorders, but many of them do recover if they have the capacity to be honest.

Conscious Honesty

Honesty, in AA, is a lot like spirituality. It's something that was considered by the Founders to be essential to maintaining sobriety, something which is hammered into us at the beginning of every meeting, and something of which most of us have only a rudimentary grasp when we first enter the program.

Honesty, like spirituality, is an acquired virtue, one in which we can continue to grow both in understanding and in practice as we mature in AA.

When I came into AA, at the relatively advanced age of fifty-one, I thought I was an honest person. Indeed, on a superficial level I was. I was told as a child that lying, cheating, and stealing were wrong, and that I would be squashed like a bug if I were caught doing any of the things commonly labeled as dishonest. My parents were not ones to make idle threats. As a result, telling the truth became more or less second nature, and I was a very poor liar. When confronted, I would tell the truth rather than make a fool out of myself. In other words, my actions were purer than my motives.

My attitudes toward money and possessions were similar. I had strong inhibitions against putting hours I had not worked on my timecard, or making long distance phone calls on someone else's line, or misrepresenting something I was offering for sale, or any of the hundreds of other petty ways in which people commonly cheat each other. Again, a lot of my so-called honesty stemmed from fear - from certainty that I was a rank amateur in the thievery department, and

and eradicate than would probably be caught.

I thus entered AA

with the second hurdle in the honesty trajectory - that is, basic cash-register honesty already surmounted, and since this is usually the newcomer's first focus. I became a little complacent. I say second hurdle, because every alcoholic labors under some degree of self-deception, and failing to make an honest appraisal of oneself early on will invariably lead to trouble later in the game. However, self-deception is much harder to recognize and eradicate than deception aimed at others. The practical advice in the Big Book and 12x12 recognizes this: although the Fourth Step is concerned with making a moral inventory, the newcomer is encouraged to concentrate on resentments toward others. Most people get around to the stubborner bits of self deception only after several years of sobriety and several passes through the 12 steps.

Candor is one aspect of honesty which tends to get short shrift among alcoholics. An obsession with personal privacy takes the place of outright lying. Instead of saying he was working late at the office, a man tells his partner that it's none of her business where he spent his evening. This sort of lying by omission, cloaked in the guise of personal autonomy, is if anything more destructive of interpersonal relationships than outright falsehood. A person who lies is unlikely to believe that it is his basic right to do so. Especially if drunk, he may become abusive if the target of his falsehoods disbelieves him, but unless he is a psychopath, he'll have some sense that what he has done is wrong. The person standing up for his privacy, on the other hand, may be fully convinced that his evasions represent the moral high ground.

Avoidance and isolationism detract from honesty. One can avoid both lying and telling the truth by having no interactions with other people at all. If one's life is so routine and regimented that little decisionmaking is possible, the opportunities to cheat are few and far between. The person who leads a solitary pickled existence minimizes his opportunities to be actively dishonest, but at the same time he reinforces one of the most pernicious forms of selfdeception: "It's OK, because I'm not hurting anybody but myself."

Motives for telling the truth matter. I mentioned earlier that I told the truth and met my financial obligations principally because of fear of being caught acted otherwise. As a first approximation, this is better than nothing, but it is desirable to find some spur to honesty which is equally applicable under all circumstances, and fixes on a positive goal rather than a negative alternative.

Sometimes malice and resentment add 'honesty' to their arsenal. A scathing attack on another individual may be 'honest' in the sense of containing no false information, but it is dishonest of a person to make such an attack in the name of common interest, concealing that he hates the target for quite different reasons, or will profit from his enemy's discomfiture.

We can never know, let alone communicate, the entire truth about a complex subject. In everything that we utter, and in every transaction that we undertake, we exercise a good deal of selectivity about what is made evident to all and what we conceal. The self-deluded person exercises this selectivity unconsciously, according to a pattern which distorts the output. The dishonest person distorts the output consciously, in ways which further his own ends at the expense of others. A naively honest person is apt to communicate too much information, in a confusing manner, obscuring crucial details.

There remains the consciously honest person, who weighs the impact his actions are likely to have and lets the probable results govern his selectivity. It is here that malice and benevolence come into play. One can arrange and edit the facts maliciously, deliberately seeking to harm others, or selfishly, without respect for others, or respectfully, making the truth serve justice and human happiness.

Recently I was confronted with a situation which brought into focus the complexities of conscious honesty, when I was asked to write a letter of recommendation for a man with a few skeletons in his closet. Candor would dictate that I include any information which the prospective employer needed to make an informed choice, but the person asking me for a recommendation clearly expected that I would not say anything to damage his chances. I had to make a choice: whether to tell the complete and unvarnished truth, betraying an implicit agreement with a person who trusted me with his reputation, or to send a letter which contained some distortions, or to refuse to write a recommendation at all, in which case the task would most probably fall to a less scrupulous person. I wrote the letter, omitting all reference to the skeletons, one or two of which were in fact relevant. I made a conscious decision based on a perception that betraying another person's confidence, even if there is no explicit pledge to secrecy, is more damaging to social relationships than failing to provide information, and therefore, unless the potential consequences of failing to communicate damaging information about another person are grave, it is better to remain silent. The ethics of revealing information about one's self are somewhat different, but there are surely times when public confessions serve no useful purpose, and come under the heading of self-defeating behavior.

Food For Thought: Out of Respect for the Program

Ever since A.A. meetings began, members have been struggling to define the format of meetings. Shall A.A. literature be read? Do we officially ask members to confine their comments to alcohol? Do we greet the speaker with "Hello" said in unison? Do we have a "fellowship break"? What prayer shall be said? Do we hold hands during the prayer? How do we end the prayer? When A.A. members visit meetings in another city or state, they may say, "Their meetings were so different from my ones at home!" and what they usually mean is that the format of the meetings is different. Some elements are the same no matter where you go; for example, many groups have found it helpful to read the A.A. Preamble at the beginning of meetings. But no regulation dictates the reading of the Preamble, or any other aspect of an A.A. meeting. Those decisions reside safely in the autonomy of each group or A.A. entity.

During the Sunday morning Big Meeting at the 1995 International Convention in San Diego, a speaker went to the podium and read Chapter Five of the Big Book, "How It Works." When he got to the Steps, some people began to loudly chant the number of each Step: "One!" "Two!"

etc. This is how one A.A. member, Clem T., described the event: "I and many others were disturbed and angered at the chanting and shouting and general irreverence displayed during the reading of the beginning of Chapter Five of the Big Book. It may be that some A.A.'s--especially young people--connect this kind of behavior with having fun.

Now, I believe in expressing the joy that this program has allowed me to feel. At the Sunday morning meeting, the music, the singing, the balloons, the conga line, and even the wave were all appropriate--before the meeting began. But there are times that call for quietness and reflection, for listening. Reading from the Big tening. Reading from the Big Book is one of those times. I've heard it read hundreds of times but I still like to listen to it."

Clem T.. is familiar with the questions of chanting because when he was chairperson of the Northern California Council of Alcoholics Anonymous CNCCAA), the same thing happened at its Spring 1988 Conference in Monterey. Clem explains, "When this happened in Monterey seven years ago, I just hoped it would go away. But some of our members assured us that it was happening at other conferences. One person was especially concerned how newcomers would respond to the chanting; they would, he feared, learn a lack of respect for the Steps, the Program, and the person speaking. I went home from Monterey and wrote a statement that tried to explain why chanting and yelling wouldn't be tolerated." Three months later at the NCCAA. Summer Conference, he compared notes with treasurer Anne K., and discovered she had written a nearly identical state-

Out of Respect for the Program

"This is the statement which was eventually adopted for use at all NCCA.A. Conferences:

"It is an honor to be asked to participate in any capacity at these conferences. It is especially nice to be part of the program, come up here and perform some small service.

Therefore, will you please be thoughtful enough to listen as the participants are reading and control your desire to join in. Out of respect for the Program and our Traditions, please give the readers your complete attention."

At first, the statement was read only at conferences where the chanting began. Clem explains, "I would get up and interrupt the chanting and say, This is not what we're here for." Some people hissed and booed, but others said, essentially, 'Shut up and listen." The present NCCA.A. chairperson, Diane 0., decided that it would be beneficial to read the statement at all meetings conducted during conferences.

"We need to learn to listen," Diane says, "and not always to talk. Chiming in and repeating what the reader is saying shows a lack of respect. And it's hard on the reader, who may be nervous up there!" It bothers Diane that the disruptions tend to occur during the reading of "the oldest and most precious parts of our literature." At her own home group, no statement like the NCCA.A. one is read; if necessary, the matter is dealt with during the monthly meeting of the steering committee. "But I know it's going on in groups out there," Diane says. "I think it proliferates more at meetings that don't have steering committees or lack connections with the service structure."

The present delegate from Northern Coastal California, Jim M., says that reading Chapter Five "is not a participatory sport. Perhaps it started because people wanted to feel part of the meeting. It is an honor to read at an A.A. meeting--and the reader shouldn't be intimidated by chanting." Of the NCCA.A. statement, Jim says, "It is done with love but it is done firmly. Nobody wants to be an A.A. 'cop,' but everyone who takes an active part in our area committee wants to see A.A. treated with respect."

Many A.A.'s who have experienced the phenomenon of "overritualization" at the group level worry that meetings are being filled up with unnecessary readings, lengthy announcements, and the like. As one A.A. recently put it, "Whatever happened to 'Keep it simple?" Concerning the transformation of "Keep coming back, it works" to "Keep coming back it works if you work it so work it you're worth it." Jim M. says, "When I first got sober, I got my answer to staying sober: I had to keep coming back. They didn't go on and say you'd stay sober 'if you work it cha-cha-cha."

If your group or area has experience, strength, and hope to share on meeting formats-problems and solutions--please let us hear from you.

ARCHIVES CORNER

- 1. In January, 1985, Dave Q. (a Santa Clara County historian) called the custodian of the American Legion Hall for a photo of the Hall for archives. The custodian was holding a bag which had been left by the Willow Glenn Group which had moved from there in 1978 when the Post Commander asked for higher rent. The custodian had been told to throw the bag away, but he saved it in case some folks from A.A. came in search of it. It contained Group records and some photos, some of which are in our Archives photo displays at Central Office.
- 2. The ideas of self-help and mutual support as treatments for alcoholism were not original to A.A.. The best known historical antecedent was the Washingtonian Movement of the 1840s, a large group of abstinent alcoholics which vanished when it ventured into all manner of "outside issues", losing it's focus and it's way. Many other smaller groups followed a similar path, especially in the late 19th century, among them the Sons of Temperance and the Good Templars. To our great good fortune, co-founder Bill W. collected ideas from these groups as well as other sources. (Our "Singleness of Purpose" may be chief among these ideas.)

In similar fashion, many well-informed non-alcoholics provided guidance and substance to our program: from Dr. Jung we learn of the need for a vital spiritual experience; from Mr. Rockefeller we learn that we don't need a lot of money and that the little we do need should come from us; the list of those non-alcoholics who gave much of themselves to assist us is long indeed. Our co-founders and our early members did well in collecting such valuable information and forming our program of recovery. We owe so much to so many.

Editor's note: Archivist and past Archives Chair, Chuck G., has provided these articles for many issues of our newsletter and we owe him great thanks. April A. is now the new Archives Chair. Welcome aboard, April. Chuck continues as Archivist and will continue to provide these articles in the coming issues.
